What does 'nonconformist' mean?

A nonconformist is a member of a religious organisation that does not 'conform' to the Church of England. People who disagreed with the beliefs and practices of the Church of England were also sometimes called 'dissenters'. The term incorporates both Protestants (Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Independents, Congregationalists, Quakers etc.) and Roman Catholics. By 1851, a quarter of the English population were nonconformists.

How will I know if my ancestors were nonconformists?

It is not always easy to know whether a family was Nonconformist. The 1754 Marriage Act ordered that only marriages which took place in the Church of England were legal. The two exceptions were the marriages of Jews and Quakers. Most people, including nonconformists, were therefore married in their parish church. However, nonconformists often kept their own records of births or baptisms, and burials.

Some people were only members of a nonconformist congregation for a short time, in which case only a few entries would be 'missing' from the Anglican parish registers. Others switched allegiance between different nonconformist denominations. In both cases this can make it more difficult to recognise them as nonconformists.

Where can I find nonconformist registers?

West Yorkshire Archive Service holds registers from more than a thousand nonconformist chapels. Most of these registers are available on microfiche at all WYAS offices and at the Yorkshire Archaeological Society in Leeds. Registers which are only available at one office are marked in bold in the list which follows.

There is a separate collection guide (no.5) listing Roman Catholic registers available at WYAS offices.

In 1837, nonconformist churches were asked to send their registers to London. These registers were kept permanently with the Registrar General after an Act of 1840. A further Act of 1858 brought in more registers. All these records are now held by the National Archives (formerly the Public Record Office) in London (see <http://www.nationalarchives.gov.uk> for further information). The public libraries in Bradford, Calderdale, Kirklees and Wakefield have microfilm copies of those registers which relate to their districts. Leeds Central Library has copies of all the Yorkshire registers.

Baptist Records

The first Baptist church in England was founded in 1612. Each church governed itself and supported its own minister. Sometimes a Baptist church belonged to a voluntary association with other Baptist churches. Few records survive before 1688, and most West Yorkshire Baptist records date from the nineteenth century. A few Baptist churches surrendered their registers to the Registrar General in 1837, and these are now at the National Archives. It is important to remember that baptism registers here record details of adult rather than infant baptism.

Congregational and Independent Records

In the sixteenth century a group of Protestant extremists, known as the Separatists, wanted bishops to be abolished, and opposed close relations between the Church of England and the state. One of these extremists, Henry Browne, set up a Congregational Society in Norwich before being forced to flee with his followers to Holland. In 1616, the movement was re-established in London. Societies, known as Independents, were founded in different parts of the country. Like the Baptists, each church was a separate body supporting its own minister, but might belong to a voluntary district association.

The difference between Independent, Congregational and Presbyterian churches became blurred. One chapel might at different times be called Presbyterian, Independent or Congregational. In 1831, the Congregational societies joined together to form the Congregational Union of England and Wales. In 1972, the Congregational Union joined with the Presbyterian Church to form the United Reformed Church in England and Wales. Some churches chose to remain outside this new union.

Registers of Congregational and Independent churches seldom start before the eighteenth century, and most do not begin until the nineteenth. Some registers were surrendered their registers to the Registrar General in 1837, and these are now at the National Archives. But many registers were retained by individual churches. A number of local churches have now deposited their archives with the West Yorkshire Archive Service.

Moravian Records

The Moravians trace their origins back to fifteenth century Bohemia and Moravia. In 1728 three Moravian societies came to London and Oxford. John and Charles Wesley were converts shortly before they launched the Methodists.

Methodist Records

The founder of Methodism, John Wesley, began a series of preaching tours in 1739. He visited Yorkshire on many of these tours, and Yorkshire became one of the great Methodist centres. Many Methodist churches in Yorkshire can trace an unbroken history from a visit by Wesley himself.

Differences of opinion within the Methodist church led to several break-away groups forming. These included:

The Methodist New Connexion, which separated in 1797; the Independent Methodists in 1805; the Primitive Methodists in 1810; the Bible Christians in 1815; the Wesleyan Methodist Association in 1835; the Wesleyan Reformers in 1849. The last two groups became the United Methodist Free Church in 1857 and joined with the Methodist New Connexion and the Bible Christians in 1907 to form the United Methodist Church. This body, together with the Wesleyan Methodists and the Primitive Methodists, formed the Methodist Church of Great Britain in 1932.

Methodist churches are grouped into circuits with a superintendent minister and usually with a head church. Several circuits form a district. District assemblies or synods send representatives to the annual conference. Tracing the history of Methodism in a locality can be quite complicated, as circuits changed greatly over the years, and churches and chapels may have been in different circuits at different times.

Originally Methodists believed that their aim was to revitalise the Church of England from within. They did not regard themselves as dissenters. They continued to attend their local Anglican (Church of England) churches where their baptisms, marriages and burials were recorded in the parish registers. But from the mid-1760s they began to break away, gathering in their own chapels and meeting houses.

Over 800 early Methodist registers were surrendered to the Registrar General in 1837, and these are now at the National Archives. The public libraries in Bradford, Calderdale, Kirklees and Wakefield have microfilm copies of those registers which relate to their districts. Leeds Central Library has copies of all the Yorkshire registers.

However, many more registers were retained by the Methodist circuits, usually by the head church of the circuit rather than the individual church. Many local circuits have deposited their records with West Yorkshire Archive Service.

Most early Methodist registers held by West Yorkshire Archive Service begin between 1810 and 1820. The majority are for baptisms only. Marriages of Methodists continued to take place in Anglican churches until 1837. Most Methodist marriage registers do not start until 1898.

Inghamite Records

Benjamin Ingham was a Yorkshire evangelist. He was originally a Methodist, but later joined the Moravians. He founded many Moravian congregations. Eventually eighty of these formed a separate church, known as the Inghamites. The church broke up in the later eighteenth century, and most Inghamite people joined the Methodists.

Few Inghamite records survive. Eight of the churches sent their registers to the Registrar General in the nineteenth century, and these are now at the National Archives.

Presbyterian Records

Presbyterians advocated a national church which had no bishops and where congregations elected clergy. Groups of elders (or presbyteries) replaced church courts. Presbyterians were persecuted for their views in the sixteenth century. When James I became King in 1603, English Presbyterianism experienced a gradual revival because of closer links with the Scottish Presbyterian church.

Presbyterianism enjoyed its greatest influence in the 1840s. After the Restoration of the monarchy it declined. There was a further revival in the nineteenth century. In 1876 the English congregations of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland and the English Presbyterians joined together to form the Presbyterian Church of England.

In 1972 the Presbyterian Church of England joined with the Congregational Church of England and Wales to form the United Reformed Church in England and Wales.

The majority of older Presbyterian churches surrendered their early registers to the Registrar General, and these are now at the National Archives.

Quaker Records

George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, began to preach about 1647. Quakers were persecuted until the Toleration Act of 1689 relieved some of their worst restrictions.

Quakers have no special class of ministers. Their structure is like a pyramid. At the lowest level the congregation is called a 'particular meeting'. A group of particular meetings form a 'monthly meeting'. These in turn combine to form meetings which were known as 'quarterly meetings' until 1966 (now called 'general meetings'). At the top of the pyramid is the 'yearly meeting'. The central executive committee is known as the 'Meeting for Sufferings'.

Quaker records are usually meticulous. They often begin in 1669. In 1776, birth and burial notes were introduced. Quaker marriage ceremonies, performed in the absence of a minister or clergyman, were recorded in great detail with many witnesses. Quarterly meetings kept duplicate registers of details supplied by particular and monthly meetings, many of whom also made copies of their own registers.

Almost all meetings surrendered their early registers to the Registrar General in the nineteenth century, but not before 'digests' of each were prepared in duplicate. One copy remained with the Society in London, the other was sent to the local quarterly meeting. The original registers are now at the National Archives.

After 1837 birth and burial registers stopped being used. But the practice of compiling birth and burial notes continued. From 1860 central registers of all Quaker births, marriages and deaths were maintained by the Society in London, but this practice stopped during the twentieth century.

Comparatively few Quaker records are deposited with West Yorkshire Archive Service. Information on all the Quaker records in Yorkshire can be found on the Yorkshire Quaker Heritage project website <http://www.hull.ac.uk/oldlib/archives/quaker/>

Useful Dates

1534	Henry VIII's Act of Supremacy established the Church of England
1661–1665	The Clarendon Code was a series of 4 Acts of Parliament, including the Act of Uniformity, designed to settle the religious problems of the Restoration of the monarchy. Those Protestants who chose not to follow the Church of England became known as “dissenters” or “nonconformists”, and were excluded from holding public office.
1689	The Toleration Act made concessions to nonconformists, giving them the right to have their own places of worship, teachers and priests subject to the swearing of oaths and declarations. Catholics were excluded from the terms of the Act.
1715 & 1717	Catholics were required by two Acts to register their names and estates with the Clerk of the Peace of the county where they lived.
1754	Quakers and Jews were exempted from the terms of Lord Hardwicke's Marriage Act (1753) and were able to marry outside the Church of England.
1791	The Catholic Relief Act allowed Catholic chapels and schools to be registered with the Clerk of the Peace. Catholics who swore a prescribed oath were allowed to practise their faith.
1829	The Catholic Emancipation Act enabled Catholics to worship freely, to sit in Parliament, to vote at elections and to own property unconditionally.
1836	Under the terms of the Marriage Act, marriages could take place in any registered place of worship. But registration of the marriage was undertaken by the district registrar, who travelled to the chapel. There was therefore no reason, apart from convenience, for nonconformist chapels to keep marriage registers. Where such registers exist, they are wholly unofficial.
1837	A Royal Commission invited nonconformist churches to deposit their early registers with the Registrar General for enquiry into their authenticity. By Acts of 1840 and 1858, registers sent to the Registrar General were deposited permanently with him. They were transferred to the National Archives in 1961.
1898	The 1898 Marriage Act gave nonconformists the right to ask the Registrar General to authorise a member of their congregation to act as registrar of marriages. This authorised person made returns of marriages at the chapel to the superintendent registrar. A duplicate register was kept at the chapel. Thus many nonconformist marriage registers begin in 1898.
